

PRODUCT FAMILY DATASHEET

Bracelets

Tennis lines, motif bracelets, coloured stone clusters and certified Grade A jade bangles, matched across the length rather than per stone.

What This Family Is For

A bracelet is a row of identical things wrapped around a joint that moves. Everything that goes wrong is a consequence of that: stones matched loosely so the line brightens and dims, clusters set rigid so the chain kinks where they meet, clasps chosen for the look instead of the weight. The four bracelets published here cover matched diamond, motif, coloured stone and natural jade, and each one fails differently if the matching is not done first.

Why Buyers Choose This Range

- Stones matched for quality and size across the whole length, not per piece
- Cluster frames set proud of soft stones so the metal takes the knock
- Clasps and safety catches pull tested against the finished weight
- Jade supplied with its natural characteristics photographed before the order
- OEM and ODM accepted, with the customer's own engraved label

Problems It Solves

- Tennis rows whose stones visibly vary in size along the length
- Motif bracelets where the bead edge changes between panels
- Chains that kink where a rigid set section meets a flexible link
- Clasps that open in a coat sleeve and lose the bracelet
- Jade bangles photographed to hide stone grain and cloudy clusters

Questions Buyers Ask

How do I give a bracelet size?

Measure the wrist and say how loose you want it. For a bangle, measure across the widest part of the closed hand instead, because a bangle has to pass the hand.

Can you match a bracelet to a ring I already sell?

Yes, if it is ordered as one job. Matching later from a different stone lot rarely works, which is why suites are quoted together.

Do you engrave our own label?

Yes. The source states that customers can specify style, stone shape, colour and size and have their own unique label engraved.

Is the jade treated?

The published jade bangle is stated as certified untreated Grade A. Certification travels with the piece.
