

PRODUCT FAMILY DATASHEET

Pendants

Carved and cabochon jadeite mounts, and dense pave statement pieces in solid 18K, built around the stone rather than around a standard seat.

What This Family Is For

Pendants split cleanly into two kinds of work here. One is mounting a stone nobody at the bench chose: a carved jadeite squirrel or an oval cabochon arrives finished, and the mount has to be drawn around it, gripping where the carver left material solid and leaving the back open so daylight still gets through. The other is pave over a compound curve, where the stone rows have to close down as the form tapers without the bead work going ragged.

Why Buyers Choose This Range

- Mounts drawn from the measured stone, then proved in wax before the stone travels
- Open galleries on translucent material so the stone is lit from behind
- Solid 18K bodies on heavy pieces, with the finished metal weight stated
- Type A jade certification available
- Every piece recorded so a repeat order can be built to the same specification

Problems It Solves

- Closed-back settings that make translucent jadeite read as opaque green
- Mounts that clamp onto the thinnest part of a carving
- Pave that goes ragged where a form tapers toward a point
- Hollow statement pieces that dent under the weight of their own stone
- Bails that leave a pendant hanging at the wrong angle

Questions Buyers Ask

Can I send my own stone or carving?

Yes. Send photographs from four sides and the measured dimensions. The mount is drawn from those before the stone ships.

Why keep the diamond work small around a carving?

Because a carving is bought for the carving. Heavy pave around it reads as two subjects competing, and it puts metal where light should reach the stone.

How do you price a pave piece?

Stone quality carries most of the cost on dense pave. Moving a grade changes the invoice far more than changing the metal does.

What chain comes with a pendant?

Chain is quoted with the pendant and rated to its weight. Give the length you want.
